Description

agent owned lot Some houses you look at and just know. That's The Parker. It doesn't exist yet, not really, just lines on a plan waiting for someone to say build it. But close your eyes and you can already see it. Set back behind a stretch of green lawn, a porch that runs almost the full length of the house. Wood columns, and rocking chairs practically calling your name. It's the kind of porch where coffee happens in the morning and something with ice happens after five. White brick on the ground floor, board and batten up top, and a roofline that just keeps going, gable after gable, with three dormers lined up across the front like they're standing at attention. Warm wood beam accents break up all that white and give it some texture, some soul. Nothing about this house is going to feel thrown together. It's going to feel considered, because you're the one considering it, choice by choice, from the ground up. Inside, the layout gives everybody room to breathe. Four bedrooms, four and a half baths, so there's no negotiating over who showers first. An office off to the side for the days you're working from home and need an actual door to close. And there's a fifth bedroom option ready to go. Because this one's to be built, every finish is still up for grabs. The counters, the fixtures, the paint on that porch, all of it waiting on you.
